3 TYPES OF WHITE

DISCHARGE

<http://www.CheckPregnancy.com>

Vaginal discharge is a fluid that exits from the vaginal opening.

The amount and type of vaginal discharge also varies among women and with the woman's menstrual cycle.

A small amount of vaginal discharge is a reflection of the body's normal cleansing process.

A change in vaginal discharge (such as an abnormal odour or colour or increase in amount), can signal that an infection is present.

Leucorrhoea is the term for the thin, milky white and mild-smelling (sometimes even odourless) vaginal discharge that many women experience throughout pregnancy.

The types of white discharge that women experience are mentioned below:

Creamy white milky discharge

Sign of ovulation

Many women experience this type of discharge during ovulation.

Sign of pregnancy

Creamy discharge can be an early sign of pregnancy.

This type of discharge is either completely odourless or carries a very mild odour.

ovulation

During ovulation, your body's progesterone levels are high, leading to a continuous or heavy discharge.

Thick white discharge

Before period

Thick discharge just before your period is perfectly normal.

This type of discharge is normal at the beginning and the end of the menstrual cycle.

During pregnancy

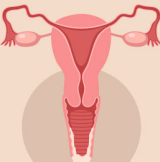

Most women experience thick, creamy white discharge in the early stages of their pregnancy.

During this time, your vagina is working overtime to create more discharge to keep the cervix healthy, moist and sealed.

Thick discharge can also be normal during the third trimester of your pregnancy.

Thick white clumpy discharge

If your discharge is clumpy and its texture resembles cottage cheese, it may be a sign of an infection.

Managing your vaginal discharge

Increased vaginal discharge might make you uncomfortable and irritated. Here are some of the tips to cope with it.

Try wearing a pad or panty liner that can help soak up the excess moisture.

Keep your outer genital area (vulva) clean and dry. It can help prevent some of the unpleasant odours that can possibly go along with vaginal discharge during pregnancy.

Do not wear a tampon or douche.

Tampons can introduce new germs to the vagina, and douching can lead to vaginal infections.

Don't use scented wipes, perfumed bubble bath or vaginal deodorants.
